What is GIM?

The Bonny Method of Guided Imagery and Music (GIM) is a music-centered transformational therapy in which a client listens to specifically programmed classical music in a relaxed state. The music acts as a catalyst to evoke, develop and transform images, memories and feelings from deep levels of consciousness. With the help of the therapist, the GIM experience can lead to integration and healing on many levels. GIM has been effective with a wide range of people presenting problems and issues of human concern.

Who can take this training?

The GIM Training is designed for interested professionals with a background in music therapy, music, counselling, creative arts therapies, and related health care professions who have completed Level 1 GIM training, endorsed by the Association for Music and Imagery, and approved by the Primary Trainer. Participants must also have received at least one personal session in the Bonny Method of GIM.

What will happen in this training?

The Level 11 GIM training provides opportunities to deepen the learning of all the aspects of the Introductory training. It includes didactic and experiential components; an introduction to three additional music programs; expanded relaxation and guiding techniques; adaptations of The Bonny Method for groups; and supervision of guiding skills. A practicum component of 10 practice sessions is required after the seminar. In addition, the student must have received a total of three personal GIM sessions, which includes one before the training. Advanced training in GIM is necessary before a student is fully qualified to practice this therapy.
